

ANDREAS SOLARO/AFP VIA GETTY IMAGES

POPE OF THE PEOPLE IS LAID TO REST

Pope Francis was honored Saturday in a funeral service attended by world and religious leaders as well as ordinary Catholics, who gathered by the thousands in St. Peter's Square. Francis' simple style, pastoral vision, and outsize footprint on the world stage reinvigorated and divided the institution that he led for a dozen years. "The guiding thread of his mission was also the conviction that the church is a home for all, a home with its doors always open," Cardinal Giovanni Battista Re, dean of the College of Cardinals, said in his homily during the requiem Mass. A2, A6.

Boston Sunday Globe

Serving our community since 1872

APRIL 27, 2025

100 DAYS OF TRUMP

A forceful opening hand

In some ways, it's hard to believe that on April 30 only 100 days will have passed since President Trump took the oath of office for a second time. The economy and financial markets have been rocked by constantly shifting tariffs. Entire departments of the federal government have been shut down, staff in others have been suddenly dismissed. Critical funding for science and education has been frozen or dramatically slashed. ■ The scale and the swiftness of the changes implemented by the Trump administration have touched not only every corner of the federal government but everyday life on a national and even global scale. Below are four areas where New England has been particularly affected: education, health, immigration, and the economy. — Jackie Kucinich

ECONOMY

ASHLEE REZIN/CHICAGO SUN-TIMES VIA AP

President Trump's volatility on tariffs has inflamed the markets and left traders wondering what's next.

EDUCATION

CRAIG F. WALKER/GLOBE STAFF

Harvard University has absorbed much of Trump's fury but other colleges are also feeling the heat.

IMMIGRATION

MIKE MATHIS

The administration's policies hit close to home when Tufts student Rümeyza Öztürk was detained.

HEALTH

ANNIE RICE/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Nearly 800 federal grants for medical research have been eliminated since Trump took office.

Uncertainty has local businesses hesitant

By Jim Puzzanghera

GLOBE STAFF

Mark Shiring, chief executive of Air Technology Americas in Farmington, Conn., thought he was doing everything right in prioritizing production of its fans and motors in the United States.

The company opened a large factory in Tennessee in 2022 and has been planning on expanding it.

Then President Trump started levying tariffs, only to abruptly pause some and threaten others, while triggering retaliatory ones from China and other nations.

The tariffs have hit the company, the US subsidiary of Germany's ebm-pabst, because certain components needed to make its large rooftop air conditioners and other products are only available from abroad, or from US suppliers who use foreign parts.

The Farmington company has had to pass on the costs of those new tariffs to its customers, Shiring said. But he can't make

ECONOMY, Page A14

Higher ed reeling under assaults by conservatives

By Julian E.J. Sorapuru

GLOBE STAFF

In the first 100 days of the president's second term, the Trump administration has framed college campuses as ground zero for the spread of leftist ideology it says has harmed the country.

There is perhaps no better case study for the administration's intentions and what hangs in the balance than Harvard University, arguably the most iconic and powerful higher education institution in the country.

The administration alleges Harvard is one of at least 60 colleges and universities that allowed antisemitism to proliferate on campus, pointing to the treatment of Jewish students amid Gaza war protests. As a result, Trump officials have demanded Harvard make a spate of changes — such as closing DEI programs, implementing "merit-based" admissions and hiring policies, allowing government oversight of certain university programs, and overhauling

EDUCATION, Page A14

For immigrants at a crossroad, roadblocks

By Tal Kopan

GLOBE STAFF

For decades, the International Institute of New England has helped refugees and migrants escaping dictatorships, violence, and chaos in their home countries adjust to life in the United States. Its staff has worked to convince the new arrivals they can trust the legal system and build stable lives here, unlike where they came from.

But now, for the first time any of them can recall, migrants and refugees are telling them they feel as if they've landed in a country too similar to the one they fled.

"We have a saying in Creole, 'You are running from the rain and you end up in the river,'" said Andriens Renaudin, the group's shelter services director and a Haitian American who works with the institute's sizable Haitian population. "A lot of them are not happy that they came. . . . It's impossible to go back to Haiti, and they're at a crossroads."

IMMIGRATION, Page A14

A capital of medicine finds itself in disfavor

By Sam Brodey

GLOBE STAFF

It took just 24 hours for Dr. Julia Marcus's research project, years in the making, to totally unravel.

Marcus, of Newton, is an associate professor at Harvard Medical School, where she has focused on how to improve access to PrEP, a lifesaving HIV medication, for people who need it. She and her team were halfway through a five-year federal grant, a coveted resource that had taken years to win.

Then, one morning in March, a superior walked into Marcus's office and told her the Department of Health and Human Services had sent a letter terminating their funding. The project, seen as a DEI initiative, "no longer effectuates agency priorities," the letter said. Marcus believes it was because her grant mentioned "equity," given that HIV disproportionately affects LGBTQ+ and Black populations.

HEALTH, Page A14

For a Rhode Island family, first a tragic loss, then division

Child at center of rift after death of her mother

By Amanda Milkovits

GLOBE STAFF

No one knew Shahrzad Naso was dying until it was too late to save her life.

After 11 days at her bedside in a Boston hospital, helpless as his wife succumbed to cancer, Scott Naso returned to their home in Portsmouth, R.I., facing life as a single father.

As loved ones gathered at his home, Naso wondered what to tell his toddler, Laila, when she asked for her mother. Then, he heard the child wailing from another room.

In front of mourners, his wife's parents, Dr. Siavash Ghoreishi and Dr. Jila Khorsand, were holding Laila down and squirting prednisone into her throat.

SUZANNE KREITER/GLOBE STAFF

Scott Naso's 3-year-old daughter, Laila, colored in the family's kitchen in Portsmouth, R.I.

Laila vomited and became hysterical. Naso scooped her up, furious.

Ghoreishi, who was also Laila's pediatrician, said she had croup, a viral infection. "I've been in practice for 37 years, and I've treated

FAMILY, Page A10

Already in the red, Harvard Med expects worse to come from Trump

By Diti Kohli

GLOBE STAFF

Harvard Medical School is known for its breakthroughs in combating diabetes and smallpox, 11 Nobel Prizes, and a competitive academic program that accepts only 3 percent of applicants.

Now its finances are in a precarious place as it prepares for impending layoffs, sweeping cuts, and calls for a "long-term, sustainable" shift in the way it operates, according to school officials at a faculty town hall last week.

The moves signal radical change at the country's premier medical school amid the Trump administration's pressure campaign against Harvard and other universities. Long pummeled by financial losses, Harvard Medical School finds itself particularly vulnerable to this month's freeze of $2.2 billion in federal funds, which includes some grants from the National Institutes of Health. The school operated in the red for 12 of the last 17 years and on average spends $11

MEDICAL SCHOOL, Page A13

Summer in New England means many things, but there are some classics. Globe Magazine.

Amy Sberald's portraits are an unsettling fusion of the intimate and the unknown, writes Murray Whyte. N1.

It is going to be a lawn story

Sunday: Windy. High: 53-58. Low: 46-51.

Monday: Sunny. High: 69-74. Low: 51-56.

Sunrise: 5:45 Sunset: 7:39

Complete report, B12. Deaths, A17-21.

VOL. 307, NO. 117

Suggested retail price
$6.00

0 947726 1