

“All the News
That’s Fit to Print”

The New York Times

THE WEATHER
Today, partly cloudy, light winds, high 68. Tonight, mostly cloudy, light winds, low 58. Tomorrow, rain from Isaías, watch for flooding, high 64. Weather map appears on Page B12.

VOL. CLXXVI No. 61,033

© 2026 The New York Times Company

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 10, 2026

Prices in Canada may be higher

$4.00

SAHER ALGHORRA FOR THE NEW YORK TIMES

Pulling Hope From Gaza’s Rubble
Beehives on a roof amid scars of war. A year after a cease-fire, Palestinians are trying to rebuild their lives and livelihoods. Page A6.

Mullin and Mamdani Clash Over ICE Shooting

This article is by Ed Shanahan, Luis Ferré-Sadurní and Hamed Aleaziz.

Markwayne Mullin, the homeland security secretary, lashed out at sanctuary city policies and at Mayor Zohran Mamdani of New York on Friday, a day after the mayor rebuked the Trump administration following a federal agent’s shooting of an undocumented immigrant in his car.

At a news conference in Washington, Mr. Mullin harshly criticized the sanctuary policies that prohibit local cooperation with immigration enforcement and took aim at New York’s in particular, saying they made citizens “less safe.” He repeatedly described Oscar Belgal, the man shot by immigration agents on Thursday, as a “thug” and “the worst of the worst.”

Fallout After Agent Hits Immigrant in Car With 5-Year-Old

On Thursday afternoon, a federal agent shot and injured Mr. Belgal, a 28-year-old from the Dominican Republic, in the Marble Hill neighborhood of New York City as immigration officers tried to apprehend him. Mr. Belgal was in a car with his 5-year-old son when agents surrounded the vehicle, according to Jessica Tisch, the city’s police commissioner. Protests broke out later at the shooting site and at the hospital where Mr. Belgal was treated.

On Thursday night, Mr. Mamdani, a democratic socialist, accused the Trump administration

Continued on Page A16

Professor Gets M.I.T. Salary To Not Teach

By MARK ARSENAULT

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. — The name of the proposed Massachusetts Institute of Technology course was as provocative as it was long:

“Language and Linguistics for Decolonization and Liberation and for Peace and Community Building — From the River to the Sea in Palestine and Israel to the Mountaintops of Haiti and Beyond.”

The instructor was Michel DeGraff, a longtime tenured linguistics professor at M.I.T. who came up with the idea in the months after the Oct. 7 Hamas attack on Israel. He was a leading faculty voice siding with pro-Palestinian campus protesters, whose frequent rallying cry for Palestinian freedom, “from the river to the sea,” was seen by some Jews as antisemitic.

An M.I.T. panel rejected the course over questions about whether Dr. DeGraff, a Haitian scholar and expert in the study of Creole languages, had the expertise to teach it. That was supposed to finish the matter.

To Dr. DeGraff, it was more like the starting gun.

Continued on Page A18

Trump’s Retribution Case Has Plunged Into Turmoil

‘Grand Conspiracy’ Inquiry Stung by Feuds, Resignations and Lack of Evidence

By ALAN FEUER and GLENN THRUSH

MIAMI — Joseph diGenova, the man assigned by the White House to lead the investigation into those who investigated President Trump, was walking out of Chuck’s Seafood near the beach in Fort Pierce, Fla., and toward his Tesla last month when his cell-phone buzzed.

It was his boss, Attorney General Todd Blanche. And he was spluttering mad.

Mr. Blanche had been cautiously supportive of Mr. Trump’s decision to call Mr. diGenova, 81, out of retirement in April to kick-start the so-called grand conspiracy case, the Justice Department’s most expansive effort to pursue people the president considers his enemies.

Now the attorney general, having soured on Mr. diGenova, was livid that he had lashed out at two prosecutors sent from Washington to help move the case along. Mr. Blanche ordered him to his office on Sept. 11 — or else, according to people briefed on the exchange.

Assuming he would be fired, Mr. diGenova quit, dealing the latest blow to a troubled investigation central to the president’s vengeance agenda. More trouble was to come.

Soon after, a top diGenova deputy, Kurt Olsen, also quit. It turned out he had failed a polygraph test about his contacts with foreigners, which imperiled his security clearance, according to two people familiar with the matter. Mr. Olsen said he complied with all requirements regarding foreign contacts and had not resigned over his clearance, but declined to say more.

Still, the dual departures laid bare months of dysfunction. They also offered fresh evidence that Mr. Trump’s demands for revenge have divided the Justice Department, diverted resources from other investigations and continued the erosion of the principle that politics must be kept strictly separate from federal law enforcement.

A New York Times examination of the inquiry, based on more than 20 interviews with current and former officials, found that it was star-crossed from the outset.

The theory of the grand conspiracy case is a bedrock of Trumpist politics: that the various investigations into Mr. Trump, spanning nearly a decade, were all part of a nefarious scheme to take him down. That is, there was an ongoing plot stretching from the investigation into ties between Russia and his 2016 campaign to the two prosecutions overseen by the special counsel Jack Smith into his mishandling of classified documents and efforts to overturn the 2020 election.

To date, Mr. diGenova and others involved in the case have found it difficult, and time-consuming, to meet the standards of evidence and jurisdiction needed to prove anything close to a conspiracy in a court of law.

Still, the pressure has not relented. The dozen prosecutors still pursuing the inquiry are fast-

Continued on Page A14

Millions Lose Private Medicare And Face Rising Medical Costs

By CHRISTOPHER ROWLAND and REED ABELSON

Millions of people with private Medicare coverage are being forced to change their insurance for 2027 and will pay higher prices for prescriptions and medical care, prompting some experts to warn that more older Americans will face greater financial hardship.

Major insurers, like United-Health, Centene and state Blue Cross plans, have shuttered plans that they viewed as unprofitable in certain markets, leaving some people with fewer choices of policies, and even more limited choices of doctors in 2027. In some rural counties from Oregon to New Hampshire, older Americans shopping for private Medicare Advantage plans will find that options have vanished completely or are dwindling to just a few plans.

Insurers Shutter Plans, Leaving Few Options

Overall, as open enrollment begins this month, roughly five million people will be forced to switch plans because their current policy has been canceled or is no longer offered in the county where they live, according to an estimate from Duos, a health technology firm. Other estimates are lower, but analysts who have been studying the issue said cancellations would probably surpass the number this year, which was the highest on record.

Dependent on Social Security

Continued on Page A13

BILL HARRIS, 1945-2026

RAIMONDO BOREA/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Bill Harris, center, after being captured in 1975, a year after his S.L.A. kidnapped Patricia Hearst.

Kidnapped an Heiress and Made Her a Robber

By ALEX WILLIAMS

Bill Harris, a Marine Corps veteran who was one of the main kidnappers of the heiress Patricia Hearst in his role as a top lieutenant of the Symbionese Liberation Army, the underground band of firebrands that epitomized — and, to many, helped discredit — the revolutionary far left of the 1970s, died on Sept. 10 in San Francisco. He was 81.

His wife, Rebecca Young, confirmed the death, at a hospital, and said the cause was a heart attack.

Mr. Harris’s byzantine journey into the American consciousness began around 9 p.m. on Feb. 4, 1974, when he and two other “soldiers” from the Symbionese Liberation Army, or S.L.A., burst into the Berkeley, Calif., apartment that Ms. Hearst, a 19-year-old sophomore at the University of California who was known as Patty, shared with her fiancé, Steven Weed.

Ms. Hearst was a scion of California’s equivalent of a royal family. She was a daughter of Randolph A. Hearst, the chairman of the Hearst Corporation, which was founded by her grandfather William Randolph Hearst, the lordly media baron and model for the title character in “Citizen Kane.”

“Patricia Hearst was a symbolic target,” Mr. Harris said later, adding

Continued on Page A22

Peace Prize Goes to a Jurist Who Rebuked Israel

This article is by Jonathan Wolfe, Aurelien Breeden, Johnatan Reiss and Zane Irwin.

A South African lawyer with a long record in human rights work, including leading a U.N. commission that said Israel had committed genocide, won the Nobel Peace Prize on Friday, a decision that drew Israel’s condemnation and underscored the country’s deep isolation on the world stage.

The lawyer, Navanethem Pillay, known as Navi, has worked for decades on human rights issues, defending anti-apartheid activists like the future president and Nobel laureate Nelson Mandela. Over the years, she has variously served as a top U.N. official and as a judge on the International Criminal Court and a tribunal investigating genocide in Rwanda.

DANIEL KARMANN/DPA VIA A.P.

Navanethem Pillay defended activists like Nelson Mandela.

But it was Ms. Pillay’s work last year on a U.N. commission on Israel that made the Nobel committee’s announcement on Friday an intensely political decision, as it put the prize in the middle of one of the world’s most divisive issues.

That commission said that Israel was committing genocide against Palestinians in Gaza, a finding that Israel rejected.

Announcing the award, the Nobel committee did not explicitly mention Gaza, instead citing Ms. Pillay’s long career in human rights and a global shift toward “power politics” that had undermined respect for law and justice. The committee chair, Jorgen Watne Frydnes, called the award “a message to those who are attacking” international law.

Ms. Pillay, 85, is “one of the most respected international jurists of

Continued on Page A8

SANCTIONS The U.S. announced financial penalties for the International Criminal Court. PAGE A9

NATIONAL A10-18

Envoy Accused in Debt Scheme

A donor says Kimberly Guilfoyle, the U.S. ambassador to Greece, asked him to pay off her credit card.

PAGE A15

Storm Battering South

Hurricane Isaías took aim at Gulf states as the first big storm to hit the mainland U.S. in two years.

PAGE A18

INTERNATIONAL A4-9

9/11-Inspired Crash Intended

Investigators said the co-pilot who attacked a FlyDubai captain aimed to crash into Israel’s biggest airport after developing extremist views.

PAGE A8

Village Votes to Leave the U.K.

A plan to house 1,250 asylum seekers near Piddington prompted a symbolic independence vote.

PAGE A5

SPORTS B8-11

Crossing the Red River

After two seasons at Texas, Parker Livingstone made a “business decision” and transferred to Oklahoma.

PAGE B8

ARTS C1-8

A Messy Night at the Theater

About 30 pounds of stage clay adds mystery and a lot of mud to the stage production “Tom at the Farm.”

PAGE C1

Studio for Sale, Potentially

The foundation of the artist Robert Rauschenberg is planning to sell his former home in Manhattan.

PAGE C1

BUSINESS B1-7

Return to White-Glove Service

Bergdorf Goodman, the glamorous Manhattan department store that has survived two bankruptcies in six years, is making its top sales associates the cornerstone of its next era.

PAGE B1

Rush to Release A.I. Agent

Meta had delayed pulling the trigger on Muse for months over safety concerns. But fears of losing a competitive edge compelled Mark Zuckerberg, the chief executive, to move ahead.

PAGE B1

OPINION A20-21

Stephen Stromberg

PAGE A20

OBITUARIES A19, 22

Fiery Coach of the Bears

Mike Ditka’s team won the Super Bowl in 1986. Da Coach, who was glib and amusing and opinionated, later became an analyst. He was 86.

PAGE A19

0 354613 9